

Probability estimation of branching processes in atmosphere cosmic ray cascades

(Talk)

Assen Tchorbadjieff

Institute for Nuclear Research and Nuclear Energy - BAS, 72

Tzarigradsko chaussee, Blvd., BG 1784 Sofia Bulgaria

`assen@inrne.bas.bg`

The cosmic particle interactions in atmosphere are branching processes. They are driven by strong and weak nuclear forces according to particle energy distribution. The mathematical formalism of Watson and Galton allows to model stochastic process of birth and decay of different elementary particles in different atmosphere path. The paper tries to define basic statistical model for numerical estimation of produced particles in cascade process.

MSC2010: Mathematical Physics , Probability and Statistics , Applications of Mathematics in the Sciences .

Keywords: Branching process, Cascades, Cosmic Rays.

Section: Probability and Statistics , Applications of Mathematics in the Sciences .